The Home Office refuses to drop its 'Grant in Error' policy. Help us take them to court

On Thursday 15 October, after asking for five extensions, the Home Office finally responded to our pre-action letter. Its answer: it will not withdraw its 'Grant in Error' policy.

Under this policy, the Home Office claims it gave people status by mistake and takes it away, even years later. We see case after case where the Home Office is wrong to say it made a mistake in the past.

Take Italian dual nationals who received their citizenship certificates after December 2020. Many were Italian from birth, as they had been telling the Home Office all along. Years ago, the Home Office accepted this and granted them pre-settled status. Then it decided those grants were a mistake. Now it is starting to admit that it was wrong to call them a mistake.

Meanwhile, people with every right to live here and get settled status are having their lives thrown into turmoil.

the3million, our solicitors at Wilson Solicitors and our barristers at Garden Court Chambers are now going through the Home Office's response in detail and preparing to take the case to court.

But we can only go ahead if we can cover the costs. Challenging the Government in court is expensive and risky. We need enough to pay our own legal costs, and the Home Office's if we lose. Without that, we cannot bring the case.
